C. 1806

The Henry Poole House is a two and one-half story stuccoed stone residence built in two parts, seven bays wide and two bays deep. The norther three bays of the building is the oldest part of the building and has a full basement, which housed the early kitchen facilities for the residence. The south part, which is three bays wide and covered with orange clay stucco, exhibits a very decorative cornice with unusual diamond patterned dentil and small brackets.

Large stone quoins are located in the corners of the entire structure. A large bake oven is located on the north side of the building in a brick and shed addition.

The interior of the structure is neatly finished with deep paneled windows, built-in cupboards on either side of the mantelpiece and chair railing. The entire structure has been stabilized and is in poor condition at the present time.

Also located on the premises is a small stone meathouse, early log barn which has been covered with tin, carriage house, end log structure with full basement believed to have been used as slave quarters.

The land upon which the house stands was purchased from William Cumming by Henry Poole, Sr. in 1806. At his death he willed this land to his son, Henry, who willed "the north division of my lands whereon I now live with all houses, buildings, orchards, fences, etc., to my sons, Daniel, Bushrod and Thornton Poole." The house remained in the Poole family until 1927.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Henry Poole House is a two story residence which faces east from the south side of Glisans Mill Road. The structure is banked on a hill over looking the old settlement of Lingancore. It is a two gable roofed structure with three brick chimneys located flush with the north and south ends and directly in the center of the building.

The structure is seven bays in length and two bays in width; entrances are located in the third and sixth bay, each is a panelled door with three light transom. Located in the remaining bays are double hung 6/6 windows which have been replaced with one or two stone lintels and quarried stone window sills. Located on the north side in a brick and stone shed addition is a large bake oven. The north section of the building which is three bays in length is the oldest section of the structure dated to probably the very early part of the 19th century. The south part of the structure also dates to the early 19th century. The north section of the roof is finished by a plain boxed cornice. The southern part of the roof is finished by a very decorative cornice which is unfortunately in poor condition; but has an unusual diamond patterned dentil and small brackets on the cornice. A wood porch, three bays wide, was located on the eastern side of the north section of the house. A small entrance porch was also located to the rear of the north section. A two story porch was once located covering the second and third bays on the south section of the building. A pedimented entrance way and porch was once located on the west side of the south section of the building. None of these porches remain intact. The south section of the building is covered with orange clay stucco. Large stone quoins are located in the corners of the entire structure. The kitchen equipped with a large stone fireplace is located in the basement of the north section of the house.

The entire interior of the structure on the first level is neatly finished with deep panelled windows, built-in cupboards on either side of the mantle piece and chair-railing. Unfortunately, the entire structure is in poor condition although it is being maintained from further deterioration by the current owners. Also located on the premises is a small stone meat house located on the west side of the main residence, early log barn which has been covered with tin and framing, and carriage shed on the east side of the residence banked against a hill is a log structure with a full basement believed to be slave quarters which has been finished inside with plastering and is now used for storage.
